Come learn about national issues, opportunities to improve the federal response to homelessness, and how you can be a voice for change.

Since 1979, the federal government slashed billions from the nation's public housing budget. This money has never been replaced. Now local communities, including ours, are expected to end homelessness. Local efforts to end homelessness are part of the solution, but without a significant increase in commitment from the federal government, our efforts won't be enough.
